

Hello Janne,

Lovely to hear from you. Bagheera is now 2 (20th December) and is just lovely. Evan and him are still best mates but we no longer have Bagheera on a lead - just too hard. Today we have been out in our front yard doing some landscaping and gardening and while Evan was tied up, Bagheera just played and played with Evan (they do wrestle but don't hurt each other).

As I am a Real estate agent I know my neighbours fairly well and have recently sold a home down the road and got another in the street under offer. It's really funny hearing the stories from the owners of these properties about how they know Bagheera. The elderly couple behind me have said that he frequently visits and if they leave doors open he sleeps on the sun on their bed!! Unfortunately he does catch the occasional bird (usually blackbirds and one waxeye) and I don't like that but realise it is his instinct to hunt and that he is very good at it. Not matter how many bells he has he is just too fast for them.

We recently had ultra fast broad-band installed in our street and one of the workers spent about an hour rolling around on the front lawn with Bagheera taking pics of him (lawn was very wet also) - I felt sorry for the guy doing all the work but apparently it was his birthday so he let him off.
